A book is not a normal object, like a spoon or a door. A spoon can feed you, a door can open and close. But when a book opens it nourishes and leads somewhere new.

Books are dependable and consistent, but we keep changing each time we read them. A spoon is a spoon, but books are never just one thing. They are whatever you need.

As she opened the door, she had no idea what to expect. The room smelled strongly of roses, and a delicate light poured in through the window. She found herself thinking of her grandfather's garden. She was lost in her peaceful memories, so she didn't hear the footsteps behind her until a voice spoke, "How may I help you?"
